

How to Use Competition to Attract the Attention of Women

The online dating world can be quite competitive. In order to gain the attention of interesting women, you have to compete with other men. What makes this difficult is the fact that most online dating sites have more guys than girls.

As a result, the competition is fierce for a fairly limited resource.

But you can use your competition to increase your success at online dating. By knowing what other guys are doing, you can take what's working for them and apply them to your own dating techniques.

Read on to discover how to do this...

The first way to check out the competition is to take a look at the profiles of other men. While this might seem a little strange at first, you can get an excellent idea of what your competition is up doing.

When looking at their profiles, write down things that you could use for yourself. Look for the following on these profiles:

- * What type of pictures they use?
- * How much humor they inject into their profile?
- * Do they reveal a lot about themselves?
- * Are they upfront about what they want from a woman?

Another way to check out your competition is to talk with friends or acquaintances who utilize online dating services. Find out what tactics they use to get the interest of women. Also ask them how they "close the deal" and get a girl on a first date.

This information is extremely valuable if you're trying online dating for the first time. The advice from your contacts can help you avoid a lot of the mistakes which guys commonly make when trying out online dating.

The final way to check out your competition is to read through forums devoted to online dating. This is a great way to learn different techniques and read people's questions and comments. No matter what you've encountered, probably else has seen it before. So if you look through the forum and ask questions, other guys can help you out.

What is great about forums is while they're filled with your "competition", a lot of these guys are will to help you out if you have a question.

The dating world can be quite brutal and it favors guys who stand out from the crowd. If you take the time to look at your competition and implement what's working for them, you can improve your chances of attracting the attention of interesting women.
